INTRODUCTION

COMMUNICATION is very vital in services delivery, especially in the medical sector.

Native Luganda speakers have names associated with different diseases but many medical practitioners cannot relate these terms to the medical terminologies for these diseases and this usually may lead to misunderstandings between patients and medical services providers.

The vice versa is also true where medical services providers use terminologies for diseases which patients fail to relate to whereas they have equivalents in their mother tongue which they would relate to and therefore have a better understanding of their medical conditions.

By compiling medical terminologies and their Luganda equivalents and meanings, the Luganda/ Lusoga/ Lugwere Vehicular Cross-border Language Commission aims at easing communication between patients and medical service providers, and also supporting teaching and learning in the medical field for the students and teachers in the Luganda speaking areas.

The words are a compilation from Luganda speakers, from health news in the media and from medical practitioners who have also given manings to these medical terminologies.

FOREWORD

OUR ancestors knew that food and plants were medicine. They knew that by eating properly, getting fresh and clean water, and getting fresh air, one gets good health and can fight off invading disease. Our old ways of treating the sick as well as doing different jobs were abandoned when foreigners came and made us hate our culture telling us that it was primitive. Now this great job of bringing back that old Kiganda knowledge of the names of diseases and the drugs that cured them is great. We got foreign words teaching us modern medicine and doing different jobs. When we get our Luganda words relating to and explaining the foreign words, this is a big step to making us experts both in foreign and our old ways of work. It is of utmost importance that different people do research in those terminologies in Luganda and pass them to the group that started this great job of relating the old traditional knowledge with the modern as a way of helping us become experts in different jobs while we remain Baganda.

Dr. Adam Kimala,

Surgeon at Kampala Hospital.
